AMU choir was conducted by the exceptional Jacek Sykulski, the well-known Polish composer, arranger and conductor. Since autumn 2011 the conductor is Beata Bielska, a long-standing assistant of Sykulski and graduate of the Choir Music and Conducting Department of Academy of Music in Poznań. During the numerous concerts conducted by Beata Bielska, the choir has exhibited the full range of possibilities of the perfect instrument – the human voice. ## Margi Ćuprija, Serbia

Suzana Milenković
conductor

Ćuprija is a town in central Serbia. It lies on the Great Morava river and it is surrounded by medieval monuments like Ravanica monastery or Resava cave. One of the landmarks is the School for musically gifted children, one of that kind in the former Yugoslavia. In 1950s, mixed city choir was founded in Ćuprija.

The choir worked successfully and stood shoulder to shoulder with the leading choirs of former Yugoslavia. Turbulent movements during the end of the 20th century made the choral singing slowly lose its power in the entire region. In order to save the tradition the enthusiastic members decided to continue the work as a church choir. In 2017 numerous events initiated the idea to establish a cultural association which aimed to preserve choral and ethno-singing. So the choir Margi was born. They have prepared concerts and have performed on humanitarian and fundraising events. One of their biggest successes was the performance at Kolrac National University Hall.

Suzana Milenkovic was born in 1967 in Cuprija, where she finished the Elementary music school "Dusan Skovran". She was awarded as a best student in the High School of Music "Miloje Milojevic" in Kragujevac, and in 1991 she graduated from the Faculty of Music Art in Skopje. During the studies she was attending choir conducting lessons with the eminent Professor Dragan Suplevski. After she returned to Ćuprija, the love and the passion toward conducting came to life with her work at the elementary music school "Dusan Skovran" where she is a leader of a children's choir. Since 2017 she is the conductor of Margi choir.

The choir members are admirers of Byzantine church music from Miskolc. In the town of Miskolc, in the northern part of Hungary, the people of almost all of the Byzantine cultures were present in different numbers.

Saint Naum was the patron saint of the first Orthodox chapel in Miskolc and that is why the choir was named after him. The chapel and the Holy Trinity Orthodox Church was built by Aromanian traders. ## Vor Frelsers Kantori Copenhagen, Denmark

Vor Frelsers Kantori aims at exploring all aspects of choir music within the European classical tradition. Not discriminating between secular and sacred music, the choir has acquainted itself with the whole scope of classical choir music, from early Renaissance pieces to contemporary compositions. But as the competition program reflects, the choir takes a special interest in music from the 20th and 21st centuries. Vor Frelsers Kantori is an independent choir, but it is housed by Our Savior’s Church in Copenhagen, and participates regularly in the church’s services and events. The Ohrid Choir Festival is the choir’s first participation in a choir competition.

Lars Sømod is considered to be one of the most distinguished Danish organists. For years, he has been a frequent organ soloist at concerts throughout Northern Europe, and as conductor of several chamber choirs, he has become an influential figure within Danish choir culture. Beside his job as an organist at Our Savior’s Church and conductor of Vor Frelsers Kantori, Lars Sømod is also a productive composer. In 2018, the choir participated in the performance of Lars’ Requiem.

In a country where more people are said to sing in choirs than play football, Copenhagen is in all ways representative of the Danish song tradition where singing together is thoroughly institutionalized and practiced at any kind of event – weddings, funerals, graduation parties, and in any kind of social context – from kindergartens to corporate companies.
